Introduction to the degree

The fundamental aim of the degree in Fine Arts is to train professionals in the visual and plastic artists. This course trains students in techniques and processes in various creative fields and provides an understanding of both classical and contemporary artistic manifestations. Nowadays, however, Fine Arts courses must transcend the traditional concept of artistic creation understood as the relationship between the artist and the work. In addition to promoting students’ creativity, the course must involve socialising aspects; the relationship with the environment is an inescapable component of creation and insertion in the workplace has become a key aspect in the training in the final stages of the degree.

Internships

Internships are voluntary, and they provide an initial contact with the business world, valid for your CV. They can also be validated as elective credits. Internships are available for students enrolled in the third year and take place in industrial, textile, ceramic, audiovisual and graphic design companies; publishing companies, antiquarians, interior design and photographic studios, art galleries, cultural foundations, museums; and in advertising agencies.

Various internship programmes in companies abroad are advertised every year (Erasmus Internships, Leonardo and Blasco Ibáñez).

International mobility

You can spend from three to ten months (that is, a complete academic year) at one of 120 universities in 35 different countries where the Faculty has exchange agreements in place.
