"Europe is beautiful, rich in resources, nature in all splendid and varied. Architecture giving us a sense of place, telling us who we are.

Civilization, fashion over the centuries, with creativity shaping the surroundings; shaping the people; shaping the future:

The shaping goes on. But now faster. More demanding of the resources necessary to satisfy, both economic and individual needs. Clean air; essential to industry (...); essential to every individual's life and health.

Unpolluted water: vital to almost every manufacturing process; but the individual citizen not just a need but a right.

Land resources and nature: the sources of all raw materials, energy and production capacity, space, amenity and the joy of living; a continuing cycle.

Nature supplying the raw materials; industry and agriculture producing the goods; individuals consuming the products. All interdependent.

But the cycle is not complete. There is a breakdown in the system: waste, into the air, into de water, into the earth.

The mismanagement of the waste can reverse the vital flows of nature; the cycle on which all human health and Europe's growth and development depends.

But Europeans are awakening; they're demanding a new quality of life. They expect a quality of product and will set a standard for the rest of the world.

Quality for a clean Europe: innovative and confident. The challenge for the 90's. The challenge for EC environmental policy and its action program for a new Europe." (...)
