Objectives

The project “Good Practice in University-Enterprise Partnership” (GOODUEP) is supported by the European Commission (Directorate General for Education and Culture, European Commission). Its main purpose has been to look into university-enterprise partnerships in six European countries and to identify a set of in-depth case studies that may be considered as good practice in UEPs.

This conference will not only present the main outcomes of the GOODUEP project: it wants to go beyond a mere stock-taking exercise and plans to provide a forum for a discussion on how universities and business may best build up mutually beneficial relationships. Representatives of public authorities and experts in the theme will join enterprise and university leaders to look at what has already been done in UEPs in Europe and at the options for their future development, with a view to providing suggestions about what governments, universities and business should do in order to increase the benefit each side expects from this cooperation.
