Part B. CV SUMMARY

I am a woman who, for twenty-five years, has been committed to learning to be an architect and I feel I am still on my way. I began my career in México and I wrote my first book at the Spanish Royal Academy in Rome. Since 1997, I have based my office in Granada, facing the Alhambra.

Embracing the foundational understanding of architecture as a tool for solving human problems, I am convinced of the importance of advancing knowledge, via research. In this moment of environmental crisis and globalization, a radical change in our approach is needed and we must tirelessly seek it. There is an urgent need to develop means of construction which consume less energy and require fewer raw materials, as well as improving their energy efficiency.

My practice is a laboratory of light, new construction systems and materials. I seek the freedom of not following the conventional patterns and taking the risk of proposing alternative ways to build a more sustainable and human future.

Founder and Director of the research group RNM-909 Efficient Housing and Urban Recycling since its creation in 2011. The group's target is to develop ideas and strategies allowing facing the project in a new way, breaking inertias that have been produced the current situation, to build a better future. We foster an architecture that gives priority to the economy of expressive resources searching a constructive sincerity that moves away from any additive. Constructive sincerity is synonymous with economy of means and resources and, in addition, of affordability for all social levels. My current investigation focus on reducing material and energy consumption, noticed as an economic advantage, but also, as a global ethical requirement.
