New European Bauhaus Southern Perspectives

This master's program joins the conversation of the 'NEB Goes South' project — a community-led NEB Lab recognized by the European Union in 2021 to co-design education changes toward a more sustainable future.

We invite students to tackle urban and architectural design through the lens of the Green Deal. The site is Catarroja, a municipality in the southern Valencia metropolitan area where the 2024 catastrophic flooding has made resilient design an urgent priority. The project combines urban planning, public space, and residential design oriented toward industrialized building systems — explored through 'learning by doing' and 'research by design' in an international studio environment.

Group E is taught in English (lectures, critics, and studio sessions). Final written submissions for TdA and PFC may be delivered in any of the UPV's official languages: Valencian, Spanish, or English.
